But soon we wiped our tears away.
Again the viol sounding,
Bade joy recume its feetal sway,
And kept our bosoms bounding,
Long aince the noise of revel died,
Our pulses lost their madness,
And in the calin of eventide
We feel the touch of sachess.

From that boon country in the South,
To which they aped before us,
Oft come those long-lost mates of youth
In dreams, and hover o'er us.
Our locks are gray, one hearts are worn,
Care o'en our sleep invadeth,
They come from bowers of youth and mors
Where leaf nor blossom fadeth,

They come with airs and acents of May,
These guests from vales Elysian,
They shun the din and glare of day,
But haunt the nightly vision.
Ob, well for us that Dreamland opes
At times its mystic portal,
Through which reinfulling, fading hopes
Gilde visitants immortal.

"Yes, yes, I am glad you came, but you see we are not in a position to do anything now. The matter is in the courts and will be adjusted in time. All you can do is to wait." And before Skrimp hardly realized it, he was gently worked out of the room and the door closed after him.

As Scrimp rode slowly along on his homeward way, he fell to pondering very seriously over what had transpired in the last few days, and at last he asked himself:

"Well, what can I do for you to-day Mr.

Just then he came even with Smith's, and Smith, being in frost, invited Sime to stop for dinner.

"Thankee," he said, "but I guess I'd better jog along,"

But Smith hasisted, and Sime yielded and followed into the house.

He was introduced to Mrs. Smith and was struck with her happy, healthy, contented look, and he could not help contrasting her with his own pale-faced, tired worn and patient wife. Then there came doating in from the adjoining room sweet strains of music—a mingling of sweet, young voices with the vibrations of the piano, and it smoothed and rested him. Then he looked at Smith with his jolly, broad face and his beaming smile, and he envied him. Simon could not contrast the surroundings—the air of aweet content and peaceful quiet—with his own home life.

"Did you lose anything by the Herringtons I's Sime asked.

"Not a cent," Smith replied, "though I might if I'd had money to lend. As it was I used all I had to spare from the farm, in repairing and furnishing the house. I hear you lost quite a sum, and you have my sympathy."

"I don't want no sympathy," Simon said.

Here is a bit of a key with which to unlock the mystery of English success in feeding sheep and lambs, as compared with our own. A well known English authority writing on the summer feeding of sheep, says: "A lamb on the Hampshire, With shire, or Borkshire downs, rises to partake of vetches and sliced mangels, and afterward enjoys a varied diet of dried foodrape leaves and white cabbase. He is not rape leaves and white cabbage. He is next allowed to roam over clover heads, and returns to his lair on the vetches." How An act was

About two weeks covers the right time for haying. It is just as well domestic anim settled as that two and two make four, that grass cut before grown does not make as valuable hay as when the growth is fully completed. Many times, however, there is less loss from cutting grass somewhat late, than from incurring any extraordinary expense in having it done just at the right time, or in cutting long before grown. There is a right time to cut grass, and farmers should come as near it as practicable.

The Connecticut Furmer has it about right: "The farmer needs to take a more active part in legislation, because there has been altogether too much ignoring of his interests in the past, and is likely to be in the future. He can get along as well as anybody else without special legislation in his favor, but it is his business to see that there is no such legislation against him. He can afford to let others alone, if they will let him alone, but when every other industry turns to government for aid, he cannot remain silent without being the victim of injustice."

There seems to be indications of jealousy an attempt There seems to be indications of jealousy on the part of the Grange towards the newly disease, lurkin formed Farmiers' Leagues. This all comes from not understanding them. There is no disposition to trespass upon Grange work. The League is designed to supplement the work of the Grange, and out of the efforts of the two bring about more than the Grange can do alone. We give this week an excellent out of the Jersey cow, Eurotisama 29668, a history of whose wonderful record was given in our lasse of June 26. Eurotisama made in one year, from April 21st, 1890, 945 pounds, 9 ounces of butter, thus exceeding the record made by Landseers Fancy 2876 in 1886, by 8 pounds, 10½ cances. She was five years old when the test began, and weighed 820 pounds six months afterwards. Generally her feed was 24 pounds of grain per day, ½ each corn meal, ground oats and bran, with pasture, ensilage and hay, according to the season. She carried a calf five months of the year. Eurotisama is a "line bred," Rioter Alphea being a double great grand-daughter of the moted oow Eurotas, and is a biring proof of the value of "blood" in breeding. She is a grand model of a dairy cow.
